This Court's cases preceding the enactment of the 1959 amendment to 31 U.S.C. §742 sanction an exception to that statute for nondiscriminatory franchise taxes imposed by states on corporations. The legislative history manifests that the amendment's purposes were to codify this Court's decisions and to forbid the inclusion of interest on United States obligations in the computation of state and local income taxes. The tax in question is a municipal income tax. The amended statute prohibits imposition of that tax upon interest on United States Government obligations. Failure of this Court to protect 31 U.S.C. §742 against the erosion presented by this case will invite all local and state governments to structure and label their existing income taxes in such a way as to join Louisville and Jefferson County in taxing interest on United States Government obligations.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEALS OF KENTUCKY

JURISDICTIONAL STATEMENT

Because R.S. §3701, 31 U.S.C. §742, prohibits municipalities from taxing United States Government obligations and the interest thereon, nine federal savings and loan associations of Louisville, Kentucky, (the "associations") bring this appeal from the portion of a decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky upholding the validity of Louisville and Jefferson County, Kentucky, taxes upon interest on United States Government obligations.

To permit the decision of the Kentucky Court of Appeals to stand would allow local tax authorities in Kentucky and throughout the country to tax interest on United States Government obligations by means which the statute prohibits.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky was not published. It is set forth in Appendix A.

JURISDICTION

The associations, as plaintiffs, on October 23, 1974, filed a declaratory judgment action in the Jefferson Circuit Court to determine whether they were obligated to pay a tax upon their net profits imposed by §727.02 of the General Ordinances of the City of Louisville. The definition of "net profit" is contained in §727.01 (j) and is essential to a construction of §727.02.

Defendants were the then five incumbent Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City of Louisville (the "Sinking Fund"). The Sinking Fund is charged with the collection of the taxes for the City of Louisville and the similar taxes levied by Jefferson County on behalf of itself and the school board. Since the county resolutions which impose these latter taxes are identical to the city ordinances, only the relevant city ordinances are set forth in Appendix B.

Although it had allowed all other taxpayers to deduct interest on United States Government obligations, in the course of the proceedings in the trial court, the Sinking Fund asserted the right to tax the associations on such interest, thereby increasing the associations' alleged tax liability by $464,472, exclusive of interest and penalties. On May 25, 1975, the associations amended their complaint to rely expressly upon 31 U.S.C. §742 as prohibiting the Sinking Fund's attempt to tax interest on United States Government obligations. The text of 31 U.S.C. §742 is set forth in Appendix C.

The trial court entered summary judgment in favor of the Sinking Fund on November 12, 1975, expressly holding that the associations were not entitled to deduct interest on federal obligations in computing their tax liability. The trial court's findings of fact, conclusions of law, and judgment are set forth in Appendix D.

After hearing the associations' appeal, the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, on November 25, 1977, rendered its opinion reversing the portion of the trial court's judgment which found the Sinking Fund not to be guilty of discrimination against the associations and remanding the issue of discrimination for trial but affirming the portion of the judgment which holds that 31 U.S.C. §742 does not bar imposition of the tax on interest on United States Government obligations. That court on February 24, 1978, denied the associations' petition for rehearing. The order is set forth in Appendix E.

Under §110(b) of the Constitution of Kentucky, the associations had no appeal, as of right, to the Supreme Court of Kentucky. The Kentucky Supreme Court denied the associations' motion for a discretionary review on June 6, 1978, the order of denial reciting that "the decision stands affirmed." That order is set forth in Appendix F.

When a motion for discretionary review is denied by the Supreme Court of Kentucky, no further proceedings are allowed in that court. Kentucky Rules of Civil Procedure ("CR"), 76.20(9)(c).

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky, after disposition of an appeal, does not enter a judgment but a mandate, "which makes effective the opinion disposing of the appeal." CR 76.30(1). After the Supreme Court of Kentucky denied the associations' motion for discretionary review, the Court of Appeals issued its mandate on June 29, 1978. The mandate is set forth in Appendix G.

Regardless of the outcome of the discrimination issue in the trial court, the federal issue of the right of Louisville and Jefferson County to tax interest on United States Government obligations will survive and require decision in this Court. Cox Broadcasting Corp. v. Cohn, 420 U. S. 469, 480 (1975). The associations have thus exhausted their remedies in the Courts of Kentucky on this federal issue.

The associations filed a Notice of Appeal to this Court in the Kentucky Court of Appeals on July 7, 1978. The Notice of Appeal is set forth in Appendix H.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1257(2). Since the Court of Appeals of Kentucky upheld the validity of §727.02 of the General Ordinances of the City of Louisville which had been drawn in question as repugnant to 31 U.S.C. §742, this matter is appropriately brought to this Court by appeal. The ordinance is a statute of the state within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. §1257(2). King Mfg. Co. v. Augusta, 277 U. S. 100, 114 (1928). Similarly, the effort of the Sinking Fund to collect the tax is state action within the meaning of 28 U.S.C. §1257(2). Lathrop v. Donohue, 367 U. S. 820, 824 (1961). The associations properly appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, since they tried but were unable to take their case higher in the Kentucky court system. Michigan-Wisconsin Pipeline Co. v. Calvert, 347 U. S. 157, 160 (1954).

If this Court does not consider appeal to be the proper method of review, the associations request that this document be treated as a petition for a writ of certiorari pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §§1257(3) and 2103.

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

The questions now presented are these:

(1) In the context of 31 U.S.C. §742, is the tax in question an income tax?

(2) Does 31 U.S.C. §742 prohibit Louisville and Jefferson County from imposing this tax upon interest on United States Government obligations?

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

In 1948, the City of Louisville, by ordinance, first imposed an annual tax of 1% of the gross wages of persons employed and 1% of the net profits of businesses in the city. Later Jefferson County levied similar taxes for itself and the school board. The tax rates for the city and county are now 1¼% each and the school board ¾%.

For many years, the Sinking Fund made no attempt to collect any tax on the net profits of any savings and loan association. The associations filed this declaratory judgment suit after the Sinking Fund began efforts to collect net profits taxes from the associations.

When the associations filed their declaratory judgment action on October 23, 1974, they sought exemption from any tax liability under §727.02 of the Louisville ordinance.

While this action was proceeding in the trial court, on May 12, 1975, counsel for the Sinking Fund wrote the trial judge that the Sinking Fund had decided to collect taxes from the associations "on their full net income without granting them a deduction for interest on federal obligations." Until then, the Sinking Fund had never compelled the associations or any other taxpayers to pay taxes on interest on federal obligations. In fact, the very tax forms printed by the Sinking Fund for the tax years before, during, and after the years in question through 1977 expressly allowed all taxpayers to deduct interest on United States Government obligations from net profits subject to tax. Page 2, Schedule 3, item G, of the return allows this deduction. A copy of the tax return form is set forth in Appendix I.

There was thus introduced into the litigation the Sinking Fund's claim that interest on federal obligations is subject to the tax. On May 29, 1975, the associations filed their amended complaint expressly asserting that 31 U.S.C. §742 prohibits the Sinking Fund's attempt to tax interest on United States Government obligations. The filing of the amended complaint was the stage in the proceedings in the court of first instance in which the federal questions sought to be reviewed were raised. The Sinking Fund answered the amended complaint, joining the issue on the federal questions.

The trial court entered findings of fact, conclusions of law and summary judgment in favor of the Sinking Fund on November 12, 1975. In law conclusion 12, the court found 31 U.S.C. §742 no bar to the tax and in paragraph 3 of the judgment held the associations not entitled to deduct interest on federal obligations in computing their tax liability. (Appendix D.)

The associations filed a timely notice of appeal from the trial court's judgment. They were free in their appeal to argue any trial court error without any "assignment of errors" under CR 75.04, as then in effect. Their appellate briefs included arguments about the nature of the tax on net profits and asserted that 31 U.S.C. §742 prohibited taxation of net profits to the extent they were derived from interest on United States Government obligations.

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky on November 25, 1977, reversed the portion of the trial court's judgment which found the Sinking Fund had not discriminated against the associations and remanded that issue for trial but affirmed the portion of the judgment which held the associations subject to the tax. The court rejected the associations' argument that the ordinance imposes an income tax saying: "This argument was laid to rest in City of Louisville v. Sebree, 308 Ky. 420, 214 S. W. 2d 248 (1948). Sebree has not been overruled. We regard this as controlling." (Opinion, p. 22.) The court concluded that 31 U.S.C. §742 "is no impediment to the collection of the tax." (Id., p. 23.) The court held that the associations "are subject to the tax and . . . the tax may be levied upon interest on federal securities." (Id., p. 25.) The court sustained the associations' contention that the tax may not be levied on dividends from Federal Home Loan Bank stock. (Ibid.) (The opinion is found in Appendix A.)

THE FEDERAL QUESTIONS PRESENTED ARE SUBSTANTIAL

This appeal presents a very substantial federal question. The ambiguity of the language of the 1959 amendment to 31 U.S.C. §742 has allowed increasingly aggressive local taxing authorities in effect to repeal 31 U.S.C. §742 as to corporate taxpayers. This Court's cases preceding the enactment of the 1959 amendment and the amendment's legislative history manifest two purposes of the 1959 amendment. One purpose was to codify this Court's several decisions which had sanctioned an exception to 31 U.S.C. §742 for nondiscriminatory franchise taxes imposed by states on corporations. A second purpose was to counter a certain state's attempt to include interest on U. S. obligations in the computation of the state's net income tax. Failure of this Court to protect 31 U.S.C. §742 against its erosion presented by this case will invite every city, county, and other form of local government to impose any type of nonproperty tax on interest on U. S. Government obligations and both such local governments and the states themselves to subject such interest to their income taxes.

The decisions of this Court do not justify inclusion of the tax in question within the exemption of the 1959 amendment.

Educational Films Corp. v. Ward, 282 U. S. 379 (1931) involved a New York state statute imposing on corporations a "franchise tax" for "the privilege of exercising its franchise in this state." In upholding the tax, this Court emphasized at page 388 that it was a franchise tax and not an income tax:

> "If we look to the operation of the present statute, it is plain that it can have no application independent of the corporation's enjoyment of the privilege of exercising its franchise. If appellant had ceased to do business before November 1, 1929, it would not have been subject to any tax under this statute, although it had received, during its preceding fiscal year, income which the statute makes the measure of the tax. Since it can be levied only when the corporation both seeks or exercises the privilege of doing business in one year and has been in receipt of net income during its preceding fiscal year, the tax, whatever descriptive terms are properly applicable to it, obviously is not exclusively on income apart from the franchise."

Werner Co. v. Director of Taxation, 350 U. S. 492 (1956) involved the imposition by the State of New Jersey on domestic corporations of " 'an annual franchise tax . . . for the privilege of having or exercising its corporate franchise' in the State." That tax, measured by corporate net worth, was clearly not an income tax and the Court held that the inclusion of the value of certain federal bonds in the taxpayers' "net worth" was not prohibited by 31 U.S.C. §742.

The legislative history of the 1959 amendment demonstrates that Congress did not intend for it to be interpreted to encompass the tax in question. The amendment was adopted to counter the position of one state with respect to the inclusion of interest on obligations of the United States in the computation of that state's net income tax.

> "Present law provides that obligations of the United States are to be exempt from taxation by or under State or local authority. The Supreme Court has held that this includes the exemption of interest on U. S. obligations from taxation by or under State or local authority. It has been pointed out to your committee, however, that one State has taken the position that the statute as now worded does not prohibit a State from including interest on Federal obligations in computing 'gross income' upon which taxable net income is determined. The bill (sec. 105) makes it clear that the exemption for Federal obligations extends to every form of taxation that would require either the obligation, or the interest on it, or both to be considered directly or indirectly in the computation of the tax, except nondiscriminatory franchise taxes (or other nondiscriminatory non-property taxes imposed in lieu thereof) on corporations and except estate or inheritances taxes." [H.R. Rep. 1148, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8 (1959); S. Rep. No. 909, 86th Cong., 1st Sess., p. 8 (1959)] (Emphasis added.)

In fine, Congress enacted the amendment to clarify the statutory prohibition against state and local authorities' levying income taxes upon interest on United States Government obligations.

The 1959 amendment codified this Court's decisions excepting nondiscriminatory franchise taxes imposed by states on a corporation for the privilege of exercising its franchise in the state. The tax in question is neither imposed by a state nor is it a franchise tax. In fact, this tax is patently an income tax imposed by a city and a county.

The ordinance imposes the tax on the "net profits of all businesses" (§727.02).

"Net profit" is defined by the ordinance to mean "the net income from the operation of a business . . . after provision for all costs and expenses incurred in the conduct thereof, and shall be the same as reported for federal income tax purposes, excluding items exempted under this chapter, but without deduction of any taxes based on income or any operating loss carryovers or carrybacks" (727.01(j)).

Inspection of the tax return form (Appendix I), page 1, part II, section B, lines 1-5, demonstrates how this is a tax upon income reported for federal income tax purposes. A corporate taxpayer, such as the associations, simply copies income and deductions reported on its federal form 1120 on lines 1 and 2, enters the difference on line 3, enters the adjustments on line 4, and computes its "Adjusted Net Profit" on line 5. This is the figure against which the Louisville, Jefferson County and school board tax rates are applied to determine the tax due.

The record of this case gives examples of how clearly income is the sole determinant of this tax. Convenient Industries of America, Inc., and Threadbare, Inc., "engaged in business in the city and county" but, since they did not have "net profits" (i.e., they had a net loss for federal income tax purposes), they incurred no liability for the tax in question.

The direct burden of the tax upon interest on federal obligations is vividly illustrated in this case. Early in the trial court proceedings the Sinking Fund conceded that two associations, Colonial and Lincoln, had no liability for this tax. At that time the Sinking Fund allowed all taxpayers to deduct interest on United States Government obligations. So much of the income of Colonial and Lincoln was derived from this interest that, with the deduction, these two associations had no "net profit" subject to tax.

The direct impact of the tax upon this interest is inescapable when it is seen that, when the Sinking Fund changed its position by refusing to allow the deduction, these two associations were deemed to owe a tax and the alleged total liability of the nine associations was increased by $464,472, exclusive of interest and penalties.

Furthermore, this case involves the type of specific singling out of federal obligations for taxation as this Court condemned in Macallen Co. v. Massachusetts, 279 U. S. 620 (1929).

During the course of this case when the Sinking Fund decided to levy the tax against interest on United States Government obligations, its counsel wrote a letter to the trial court stating:

> "[T]he Sinking Fund now wishes to assess and collect occupational license fees from the plaintiffs for the years in question in this suit on their full net incomes without granting them a deduction for interest on federal obligations."

Macallen involved an amendment to a Massachusetts tax statute while the instant case involves a change of policy by the Sinking Fund. The following language of Macallen, at 631-2 of 279 U. S., fits this case exactly:

> "In the present case, it appears that the original statute exempted from consideration as a part of the measure of the tax all interest upon the nontaxable securities. The amended act now in force has the effect of repealing this original provision and imposing a burden upon the securities from which, by express language, they had theretofore been free. This was a distinct change of policy on the part of the Commonwealth, adopted, as though it had been so declared in precise words, for the very purpose of subjecting these securities pro tanto to the burden of the tax." (Emphasis by the Court.)

Also, forcefully illustrating that the tax is an income tax is the fact that, until 1962, the associations, being exempt from federal income tax, "did not report any net profits on federal income tax returns and were exempt from the occupational tax by the wording of the ordinance." (Opinion of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky, p. 21, Appendix A.)

The Court of Appeals of Kentucky devoted none of its opinion to an analysis of the nature of the tax and simply recited that City of Louisville v. Sebree, 308 Ky.

420, 214 S. W. 2d 248 (1948), had laid the issue to rest. (Id. at p. 22.)

In Sebree, a hurried test case decided only 37 days after the effective date of the tax, the Kentucky Court of Appeals ruled that this tax was not an income tax in order to uphold its validity. Both the constitution (§181) and a statute (KRS 91.260) of Kentucky prohibit the imposition of an income tax by a city or county. Following the Kentucky court's determination of its validity, other cities and counties throughout Kentucky adopted taxing statutes patterned after this tax. By the time the justices of the Kentucky high court had an opportunity to observe the tax in operation, the tax had become so entrenched throughout the commonwealth, that the justices, while willing to admit that the tax was an income tax, were unwilling to invalidate it for fear of the disruptive effect such invalidation would have on the various city and county governments which had adopted the tax.

The concurring opinion (Judge Osborne joined by Judges Reed and Neikirk) in City of Lexington v. Motel Developers, Inc., Ky., 465 S. W. 2d 263 (1971) states that:

> "There can no longer be any doubt but what this Ordinance imposed an income tax practically identical to that imposed by the federal government. It was attacked in the courts and this court in a lengthy, utterly confusing, opinion held the tax to be a license tax. See City of Louisville v. Sebree, supra."
> "In retrospect it now appears that there is little doubt but what the occupational tax as was enacted by the City of Louisville in Ordinance 83, Series 1950, was in violation of Section 181. However, this court found otherwise. Based upon that decision, many other cities have adopted either highly similar or identical taxes. For us to recant at this time and declare that type ordinance invalid would be to invalidate practically all occupational license taxes in this Commonwealth. I do not believe this is a course that is practical nor would it demonstrate the degree of wisdom that the people have a right to expect from their judicial officials. The die is now cast and I will not disturb these taxes." Id. at 264-5.

The concurring opinion in Patrick v. City of Frankfort, Ky., 539 S. W. 2d 275 (1976) (Justice Stephenson joined by Justice Jones) states:

"I admire the intellectual clarity of the trial court in the statement that the occupational tax is not unconstitutional 'only because the Court of Appeals has said so.' In my view, the occupational tax, despite the semantic legerdemain in prior opinions, is an income tax and clearly contravenes Section 181 of the Kentucky Constitution.

"The Sebree case represents expediency for laudable reasons. I would not have voted for the opinion. However, I am painfully aware of the fiscal chaos which would result in municipalities, great and small, throughout the Commonwealth if we should invalidate those occupational tax ordinances now in effect. I would say, we should not in the future depart from the plain provisions of Section 181." (539 S. W. 2d at 278, emphasis by Justice Stephenson.)

No fiscal chaos will result from a decision in this case that this tax is an income tax for purposes of 31 U.S.C. §742 since the Sinking Fund here is attempting to add interest on United States Government obligations to its preexisting tax base. This appeal does not seek general invalidation of any Kentucky municipal tax ordinances.

The tax is so clearly an income tax that Commerce Clearing House, a national legal publishing company, at paragraph 72-700 of its "Kentucky Tax Reports" states: "Below is set forth a digest of the occupational license, or income tax, imposed by Chapter 727, Code of Louisville."

This Court has held the City of Louisville tax to be an income tax when tested by federal law (the Buck Act, 4 U.S.C. §§106 and 110(c)). Howard v. Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, 344 U. S. 62 (1953).

Once again the question is, What kind of tax is this, tested by federal law (31 U.S.C. §742)?

The importance of the federal question is the need for a definitive decision to prevent this erosion of 31 U.S.C. §742. If the exception of the 1959 amendment is allowed to cover this tax, then there will be no city, county or state income tax that cannot be structured and labeled to fit the 1959 amendment.

CONCLUSION

The decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky sustaining the tax on interest on federal obligations increases the associations' tax liability by $464,472, exclusive of interest and penalties. Large as this sum is, the more significant fact is that the Court of Appeals of Kentucky has sanctioned municipal violations of (1) the time-honored principle that federal obligations are exempt from local income taxation and (2) 31 U.S.C. §742, a federal statute requiring the exemption in this instance.

Unless this Court should summarily reverse the decision below, briefs on the merits and oral argument are indispensable to an understanding of the Louisville tax, especially since this Court has never written an opinion interpreting the 1959 amendment of 31 U.S.C. §742.

This Court should note probable jurisdiction and reverse the decision of the Court of Appeals of Kentucky.

BEFORE: VANCE, WILHOIT and WINTERSHEIMER, Judges.

VANCE, JUDGE: The question at issue is whether savings and loan associations are subject to the occupational license taxes levied by Louisville and Jefferson county, and, if so, whether interest income on federal securities is subject to the tax. There are collateral issues as to whether the attempted collection of the taxes from appellants is unconstitutionally discriminatory.

In 1948 the City of Louisville enacted an occupational license tax imposing a fee upon the net profits of all businesses, professions or occupations from activities conducted in the city. Subsequent occupational license taxes were levied for the benefit of Jefferson County, the school systems and the Transit Authority of River City. The briefs have dealt largely with the City of Louisville tax because its disposition will determine the result in the other cases.

The Louisville ordinance defines "business" as an enterprise, activity, profession of undertaking of any nature but excludes the usual activities of Boards of Trade, Chamber of Commerce, trade associations or unions and corporations or associations organized and operated for civic purposes where no part of the earnings or income or receipts of such groups or associations inures to the benefit of any private stockholder or individual.

Net profit was defined as the net income from the operation of a business or enterprise and shall be the same as reported for federal income tax purposes.

The appellants are all federal savings and loan institutions organized under The Homeowners Loan Act of 1933. They operate with funds received from depositors who are paid interest on their deposits. Their business, in the main part, consists in the making of loans for the construction of single family residences. The membership of the associations consists of all those persons who are either depositors or borrowers. The members elect boards of directors who manage the affairs of the associations.

The agency responsible for the collection of the occupational tax is the Sinking Fund, whose commissioners are designated as appellees. From the date of the enactment of the ordinance until the commencement of this litigation national and state banks, credit unions, production credit associations, banks for cooperatives and savings and loan associations have not been required to file occupational license tax returns. The exemption of the savings and loan associations from the requirements of the tax has a peculiar history. Until 1962 savings and loan associations were exempt from federal income tax by the Internal Revenue Code. Thus until 1962 they did not report any net profits on federal income tax returns and were exempt from the occupational tax by the wording of the ordinance.

In 1964 the Attorney General of Kentucky issued an opinion that savings and loan associations were exempt from license taxes by virtue of KRS 136.300, the pertinent part of which is as follows:

> The association shall not be required to pay local taxes upon its capital stock, surplus, undivided profits, notes, mortgages or other credits, and the tax provided by this section shall be in lieu of all taxes for state purposes on property of the association.

In 1971, the Attorney General (OAG-71-518) withdrew his previous opinion and concluded that savings and loan associations were subject to local license taxes. Because of this opinion the commissioners of the Sinking Fund then commenced an effort to collect the occupational license tax from appellants.

No effort was made in the beginning to collect a tax upon interest income from United States securities. Organizations and persons who were not exempt from filing an occupational license tax had been allowed a deduction for interest earned on federal securities. The occupational license return form provided for the deduction in every year applicable except 1968. In 1968 the commissioners determined that the tax should be assessed on federal interest but, due to a large number of protests and a contrary legal opinion, changed their mind. No effort was made to collect the tax on interest in 1968 or any subsequent year until the commencement of this action.

I. Are Savings and Loan Associations Subject to the Occupational License Tax.

Appellants contend they are not subject to the tax for a variety of reasons. The first reason offered is that the license tax ordinance is unconstitutional because it imposes an income tax which is prohibited to cities. This argument was laid to rest in City of Louisville v. Sebree, 308 Ky. 420, 214 S. W. 2d 248 (1948). Sebree has not been overruled. We regard this as controlling.

Appellant next asserts exemption from the tax upon the basis of KRS 136.300. We concur with the 1971 opinion of the Attorney General that appellants are subject to the tax. The ordinance does not levy a tax upon capital stock, surplus, undivided profits, notes, mortgages or other credits which are the only items excluded from local taxes.

Appellants next contend that under the definitions contained in the ordinance, they could be subject to the tax only if they can be classified as "businesses" but that they are not businesses because the definition of "business" excludes corporations and associations organized for "civic purposes." Appellants claim to be civic organizations no part of whose earnings inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

It is admitted however that all depositors are paid interest on their deposits and that the depositors are members of the associations. One aspect of the operation of the associations is to provide capital for construction of homes but another aspect is to provide a means for the investment of the members' capital funds. We are not convinced the exclusion applicable to civic enterprises was intended to exempt appellants from the tax.

Having determined that appellants are subject to the tax, the next question is whether their income received from United States securities is subject to the tax.

The Internal Revenue Code, 31 U.S.C., Section 742, exempted obligations of the United States and the interest thereon from local taxation. In 1959 section 742 was amended to permit the levy of "nondiscriminatory franchise taxes" on corporations in lieu of other taxes upon federal obligations.

Appellants are corporations and would have been subject to a non-discriminatory tax upon interest earned on federal obligations since 1959 except for the fact that they were exempt as shown earlier in this opinion because they were not subject to an income tax until 1962.

Since 1962 there has been no impediment to the collection of the tax unless, as argued by appellants, the tax is discriminatory. The basis of the alleged discrimination is that there has been no attempt to collect the tax from national or state banks, credit unions, production credit associations, or banks for cooperatives. In fact, there does not appear to have been any effort to collect the tax on interest on federal obligations from any type of corporation.

The exemption for banks is mandated by KRS 316.270. We hold the separate classification of banks is not unreasonable.

Credit unions are exempt from local taxation by KRS 290.300 and 12 U.S.C., Section 1768. We find no reason, however, to exempt production credit associations and banks for cooperatives and indeed all other private corporations while attempting to impose the tax upon appellants alone. It seems undisputed that until sometime after this litigation was begun, the appellees believed that everybody was entitled to a deduction for interest on United States obligations and that they did not seek to collect that tax from anyone. During the course of the litigation appellees have come to the belated realization that they could have imposed the tax upon appellants and other corporations for years—but the effort to collect the tax on interest has been limited to appellants and three state savings and loan associations.

The record does not reveal the extent to which other corporations may have had taxable income on federal securities.

It may be that further evidence would show the liability for tax on the part of other corporations against whom there is now no effort to collect the tax is so trivial that the failure to pursue them does not constitute invidious discrimination. On the other hand, if there are substantial numbers of other incorporations that are subject to the tax but are not being pursued, the enforcement of the tax is discriminatory. The appellees cannot deliberately limit the application of a general tax to one class of taxpayers.

We find no merit in the contention that the enforcement is barred by limitations or issue preclusion. There is merit to the contention that the tax should not apply to dividends on Federal Home Loan Bank stock. The Federal Home Loan Bank Act of 1932 specifically exempts from taxation the bank and its capital. This exemption would apply to dividends on the capital stock.

Fireside Greater Kentucky Savings and Loan Association and Southern Federal Savings and Loan Association appeal from orders denying intervention after the final judgment was entered.

Each of these appellants knew of the pending litigation and could have participated in it before judgment. They offer no good reason for failing to do so. We think their motion to intervene was not timely and the trial court properly denied intervention.

The issues as to whether appellants are subject to the occupational license taxes and whether or not such taxes may be levied upon the interest received from United States securities seem to be purely questions of law as to which there is no genuine issue of fact. Summary judgment as to those issues was proper and we affirm the judgment of the trial court that appellants are subject to the tax and that the tax may be levied upon interest on federal securities.

There appears to be a genuine issue of fact as to whether appellees are seeking to enforce the tax against appellants in a discriminatory manner. Summary judgment therefore as to liability of appellants for the payment of the tax is premature.

The judgments in appeals Nos. CA-348-MR and CA-349-MR are affirmed. The judgment in appeal No. CA-219-MR is reversed for further proceedings in conformity with this opinion.

JEFFERSON CIRCUIT COURT

CHANCERY BRANCH, SECOND DIVISION

No. 192965

v.

WILLIAM D. MEYERS, ET AL. - - - Defendants

FINDINGS OF FACT, CONCLUSIONS OF LAW AND JUDGMENT

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. An actual justiciable controversy exists between the parties herein.

2. The Plaintiffs filed a suit for a Declaration of Rights concerning the applicability of the Louisville occupational license tax to their savings and loan operations in the City.

3. By way of Amended Answer, filed with leave of Court, Defendants brought into issue the applicability of the county and school license taxes to the operations of the Plaintiff associations, all taxes being based upon similar language found either in City ordinance or County fiscal court resolution. Additionally the applicability of the Transit Authority of River City ("TARC") tax will be governed by the Court decision in this case because of similar language found in the City Ordinance and (or) County Fiscal Court Resolution levying such tax.

4. By way of Amended Complaint Plaintiffs put into issue the question of deductibility of interest received by Plaintiffs on obligations of the United States. Defendants by way of Answer to Amended Complaint denied the deductibility of said interest, and thus the issue became joined.

5. The nine Plaintiffs are all federally chartered savings and loan associations organized under Section 5 of the Homeowners' Loan Act of 1933, as amended (12 U.S.C. §1464). As such, the Plaintiffs are federally chartered membership corporations owned by their depositors and borrowers who constitute their membership and who have the exclusive right to elect their boards of directors which in turn manage the affairs of the Plaintiffs.

6. The individual Defendants in this action together constitute all of the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City of Louisville, Kentucky, and have been sued in their official capacity as such. As such the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund are charged by statute, ordinance and appropriate County Fiscal Court resolution, with the responsibility of collecting the occupational license taxes for the City of Louisville, County of Jefferson, Jefferson County Schools and TARC.

7. The said Plaintiffs have business addresses in the City of Louisville, County of Jefferson, Kentucky and are carrying on the business of savings and loan associations at said addresses.

8. Said operations include the receipt and disbursement of savings deposits, the payment of interest on the same, the making and servicing of mortgage loans, the purchase and sale of obligations of the United States and related activities.

9. The Plaintiffs pay local ad valorem taxes on their real and tangible personal property and the tax of $1.00 per $1,000.00 of paid-in capital to the State of Kentucky under KRS 136.300. The Plaintiffs also pay federal corporate income taxes.

10. Defendants have not discriminated against federally chartered savings and loan associations in favor of state chartered savings and loan associations. The attempts to impose the appropriate occupational license taxes against the Plaintiffs resulted in the filing of this Declaration of Rights suit, and said Defendants continue to seek to impose the occupational license taxes in the same manner and amount against state chartered institutions of like nature. Any exclusion or omission of an association has not been proven intentional on the part of the Defendants. In 1975 the Defendants secured statute of limitations waivers from all known savings and loan associations, federal and state, not included in this lawsuit, to preserve their right to collect license taxes pending the result of this particular litigation. Prior to the institution of this suit, Defendants in 1974 secured waivers from all savings and loan associations known to it in the City and County.

11. The operation and organization of banks, credit unions, banks for cooperatives and production credit associations as defined and established in the appropriate statutes concerning them are different and distinctive from the operation and organization of savings and loan associations. Mutual savings banks do not exist in Kentucky.

12. For federal income tax purposes the said Plaintiffs have been including in their income interest received on federal obligations. The Defendants in computing the occupational license taxes due and owing the city, county, school district and TARC, if Plaintiffs are subject to said taxes, have calculated the total tax liability with the inclusion of said interest.

13. The record indicates that with the exception of 1968 the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund have uniformly permitted the deduction of interest on federal obligations to all taxpayers. Defendants now state that they have been in error in permitting this deduction to corporate taxpayers, and the question is before the Court for resolution.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

1. This action for Declaration of Rights is properly brought under KRS 418.040, and the Court has jurisdiction of the parties. No genuine difference exists as to any material fact and the case is accordingly proper for decision by summary judgment under C.R. 56.

2. The City occupational license tax is levied pursuant to KRS 91.200 and 92.281. The County occupational license tax is levied pursuant to KRS 68.180. The occupational license tax for schools is levied pursuant to KRS 160.484 and 160.605. The occupational license tax for TARC is levied pursuant to KRS 96A.320.

3. Louisville has imposed and provided for the levy and collection of the City occupational license tax authorized by the above-cited statutes by means of the ordinances comprising Chapter 727 of the Codified General Ordinances of the City. The three other occupational license taxes have been imposed pursuant to the respective statutes authorizing them by appropriate resolutions and orders adopted by the Fiscal Court of Jefferson County.

4. The savings and loan operations carried on by said Plaintiffs at their respective places of business in the City of Louisville and branch offices in the County of Jefferson constitute the engaging in an occupation, business, trade or other activity in the City within the meaning of Ordinance 83, Series 1950, Section 727.02 of the Codified Ordinances of the City of Louisville and the appropriate County resolutions.

5. The conduct by the Plaintiffs of their savings and loan operations in the City and County constitutes a business within the meaning of the same ordinance of 1950, as amended, namely 727.01(c) and said operations do not qualify for any of the exemptions established therein.

6. The Court further finds that the said Plaintiffs have net profits within the meaning of Section 727.01(j) and the corresponding definitions in the County resolutions. Such are the same as reported for federal income tax purposes.

7. Plaintiffs are not exempted from local occupational license taxes by KRS 136.300 which imposes upon them a state tax of $1.00 per $1,000 of paid-in capital. That statute, and KRS 132.200 likewise, only exempt the Plaintiffs from local ad valorem taxes on their intangible personal property.

8. The Plaintiffs have attacked the constitutionality under the State Constitution of the occupational license taxes. On this issue, the Court is bound by prior decisions of the Court of Appeals expressly upholding the constitutionality of the City occupational license tax, the County occupational license tax and the occupational license tax for schools and accordingly, finds the occupational license taxes to be constitutional.

9. The Plaintiffs are not exempt from the City occupational license tax under the exemption which appears in KRS 91.200 and 92.281 for companies which pay both an ad valorem tax and a franchise tax. The Court finds that this exemption is applicable only to public service corporations and is meant to accord with the specific exemption for public service corporations found in the statutes authorizing the other occupational license taxes.

10. The court has found that the Defendants are not discriminating against federally chartered savings and loan associations such as the Plaintiffs in favor of state chartered savings and loan associations. State chartered savings and loan associations are the only other "similar or local mutual cooperative thrift and home financing institutions" operating in Louisville and Jefferson County. So

Section 5(h) of the Homeowners' Loan Act of 1933 [12 U.S.C. §1464(h)] is not being violated.

11. The failure of the Defendants to attempt the collection of occupational license taxes from banks, credit unions, mutual savings banks, banks for cooperatives, and production credit associations, while at the same time seeking to collect taxes from these Plaintiffs, does not constitute a violation of equal protection under the Fourteenth Amendment nor a violation of the uniformity requirement for taxation under Section 171 of the Kentucky State Constitution. As a finding of fact the Court found significant differences between the Plaintiffs and the above listed organizations. The power of state and local legislative bodies to classify businesses based upon the difference in operation or characteristics clearly exists and has been approved by the highest courts of this state and nation. Certain of the above listed organizations additionally are either exempt by statute, have no net income for federal income tax purposes and so have no net profits for City license tax purposes, or certain of them do not exist within the City or County.

12. The Plaintiffs are not entitled to deduct interest earned on federal obligations while establishing their income for purposes of occupational license tax liability. Title 31 U.S.C. §742 exempts such interest from taxation except that imposed by the following type of tax: "nondiscriminatory franchise or other nonproperty taxes in lieu thereof imposed on corporations." This Court finds that the occupational license taxes involved herein come within the exception to the exemption contained therein.

13. The Defendants are not estopped from requiring said Plaintiffs to include such interest in computing their total income for purposes of occupational license tax liability because of actions allegedly taken in another Jefferson Circuit Court case styled Commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City of Louisville v. Republic Building and Loan Association. Apparently, the federal interest question was not raised in that case and arguments of Plaintiffs are not sufficient to maintain estoppel or issue preclusion against a public body seeking to perform a governmental function.

JUDGMENT

In accordance with the foregoing Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law and on motion of the Defendants, the Court hereby grants the Defendants Summary Judgment pursuant to Rule 56 of the Kentucky Rules of Civil Procedure and enters the following Order and Declaration of Rights:

1. The Plaintiffs are subject to and obligated to pay the City and County occupational license taxes, the occupational license tax for schools and the occupational license tax for the Transit Authority for River City. The Plaintiffs do not qualify under any existing exemption from these taxes.

2. The net profits of the Plaintiffs for purposes of computing their occupational license tax liability shall be the same as reported to the Internal Revenue Service for federal corporate income tax purposes subject to the few adjustments provided for in the Louisville ordinances and Jefferson County resolutions and orders.

3. The Plaintiffs are not entitled to deduct interest earned on federal obligations in establishing income for purposes of computing their occupational license tax liability.

4. The Plaintiffs therefore are required to register with the Sinking Fund and file occupational license tax returns for the tax years involved and henceforward.

5. The Sinking Fund shall have the right to recover from the Plaintiffs the occupational license taxes due from them for the past five years or for such longer period of time as to which the parties may have agreed by appropriate waivers to extend the period of limitations plus the interest and penalties provided for in Section 727.32 of the Louisville ordinances and the corresponding provisions in the Jefferson County resolutions and orders.

6. The Plaintiffs shall bear the costs of this action.

Entered this 12th day of November, 1975.

The allocation formula is for the use of licensees whose business activity is not confined to either the City of Louisville or to Jefferson County outside Louisville. The percentage of adjusted net profit (Part III, Line 1) subject to each occupational fee is obtained by computing the average of (1) the percentage of receipts from sales made and/or services performed within each local licensing jurisdiction to the total of such receipts everywhere, and (2) the percentage of payroll in each local jurisdiction to payroll everywhere. The figures which you insert in Columns A, B, and C may be rounded to the nearest dollar.
